Brief History of South African Wines

Despite the fact that South Africa has often been labelled a “New World” wine producer, the country recently celebrated 350 years of winemaking tradition. Over these many years, the industry has seen its fair share of setbacks, from the incredibly destructive outbreak of the root disease phylloxera in the 1880’s to massive overproduction in the 20th century. To ensure the integrity of the South African wine industry, the government set up the co-operative cellar of KWV (Koopertiewe Wijnbouwers Vereniging) to control sales and stabilise pricing. Government also implemented a quota system that limited new vine plantings as well as a quarantine system to control the importation of new plant material. While these regulations had the desired effect, it became apparent over time that the system had some shortcomings. KWV was more interested in quantity than quality, which had a major negative effect on the industry.

The most recent blow to the industry came in the 1980s with international sanctions. These virtually put a stop to the industry outside the borders of South Africa. In 1990, Nelson Mandela was released from prison and new life was given to the South African wine industry. Almost overnight, the international spotlight was placed on South Africa and the enticing wine industry. International markets opened up and exports grew. Winemakers began to travel and learnt from other wine industries, bringing home the knowledge they had acquired. This international exposure has had a direct impact on the quality of the South African wines that you find today.

History of Rust en Vrede

For 315 years, Rust en Vrede has played a major role in defining Stellenbosch as the great wine region that it is today. Rust en Vrede was established in 1694 by the then Governor of the Cape, Willem Adriaan van der Stel. The first house on the estate was built in 1780, soon followed by the cellar in 1785. This original cellar is where you are dining with us tonight. In 1790, the large manor house was built. All three of these buildings are now recognised South African National Monuments.

At the end of 1977, the Engelbrecht family took residence on Rust en Vrede. The family has a rich history in the wine industry, with grape growers dating back to the early 1700's. By taking residence at Rust en Vrede, the Engelbrecht family became wine producers for the first time. In 1978, Rust en Vrede produced its first wines of the modern era. Still today, all of our wines are classified as "Estate Grown". This designation is reserved for those wineries that grow, make and bottle their wines entirely on the property. In 2007, the Rust en Vrede restaurant opened.

It is our honour to welcome you to the restaurant.

Note from Sommelier

Our wine list does not contain any descriptive notes. I will gladly assist you throughout your evening here with us. I hope you will take pleasure in browsing through the list and please feel free to ask any questions you may have.
